William Frank Hanenkrat, a native of Appomattox County, is shown with book, THE EDUCATION OF A TURKEY HUNTER, written by him and published by Winchester Press of New York.

Appomattox Native Has First Book Published

For over a half a century William Frank Hanenkrat has studied the ways and wiles of the American turkey. A native of Appomattox County, some of the finest turkey country in America, Hanenkrat spent his boyhood in a way of life now all but vanished - on an old-fashioned, nearly self-contained farm. As a young child he learned intimately the world of the orchard and field, pasture and woods, stream and hillside, and when he started hunting with a gun at the age of ten, he already knew a great deal about turkeys and how to stalk them.

Hanenkrat served his woodman's apprenticeship with a subsistence hunter, a man whose livelihood dpended upon his ability to outwit his quarry. Later on, Hanenkrat tempered his practical experience with scientific training, as he worked worked with professional game biologists, helping with pioneer efforts in turkey management, including Virginia's first propagation and stocking programs. In the late 1940s Hanenkrat developed a unique box-type turkey caller that proved so versatile and rich in tone that he began producing it commercially. The Old Master Turkey Caller has been on the market ever since.

Hanenkrat will have his book, THE EDUCATION OF A TURKEY HUNTER, ready for sale within about ten days. It can be purchased from him at a
